OnProcess appoints new Head of Sustainability

Boston, MA: OnProcess Technology, a global pioneer powering the world's service value chains, today announced the appointment of Caspar von Daniels as the new Head of Sustainability. This new role further emphasizes the company's commitment to making the world's service supply chains more sustainable and more circular.

In his role, Caspar will be responsible for defining and driving OnProcess's sustainability and circular economy initiatives, market messages and practices both inside OnProcess as well as with its customers, partners and broader ecosystem.

Caspar joins OnProcess after 3.5 years of working for the non-profit organization, Circle Economy. In his role there he helped companies across industries formulate data-driven strategies for the Circular Economy to support their sustainability agendas.

Commenting on the appointment, Oliver Lemanski, CEO of OnProcess said: "I am delighted to welcome Caspar to the OnProcess team as the new Head of Sustainability. Thanks to his comprehensive background knowledge, network, and experience, he will be instrumental in helping us further our goals around driving the world's circular service supply chains. How after sales supply chains are run can have huge impact on emissions as well as the earth's materials and resources. As an industry leader in the sector, we want to ensure that they are run and managed not only efficiently but also sustainably and with minimum impact on the planet."

"I am a profound believer that we can create an economy that enables resilient societies, thriving within the limits of the planet. So, I have made it my job to support businesses on their innovation trajectory towards a Circular Economy", Caspar said. "I am excited to join OnProcess as Head of Sustainability, where I'll be focusing on the company's mission to power the world's circular service supply chains."
